THE FIRST YEAR OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS. By George Grafton Wilson.
Boston: Little, Brown & Co. 1921. Pp. xi, 94.

This little volume, embodying the substance of an address delivered before the Twentieth Century Club of Boston, aims to present a view of the work of the League of Nations during the first year of its existence. It summarizes compactly the making of the Covenant from the convening of the Peace Conference at Paris to the ratification of the Treaty of Peace with Germany, the Covenant in operation through the League Council from the ratification of the Treaty to the first meeting of the League Assembly, and the Covenant in operation through the League Assembly during that body's first session. Wherever feasible, it draws upon the texts of documents or the words of responsible officials of the League. It is a chronicle without comment and without pretense of style. The intrinsic significance of the subject-matter is trusted to sustain the reader's interest. To all who seek a succinct and authoritative account of "the great experiment" the book is heartily commended.

EDWIN D. DICKINSON.
